

Ten Questions: The Protagoras Dialogue

In order to answer the following ten questions, read pages 12–16 of “Socrates (Part 1)”, which can be found in Archie’s resources.

1. According to Protagoras, what good does a sophist do?
2. According to Protagoras, what are the five civic virtues?
  - (i)
  - (ii)
  - (iii)
  - (iv)
  - (v)
3. Socrates and Protagoras debated about whether virtue is nature or nurture. According to Protagoras, virtue is nurture (rather than nature). Yet despite his initial doubts Socrates was ultimately persuaded by the philosophical sophist.
  - (i) At first, Socrates doubted that virtue can be taught, but why did he have his doubts about the teachability of virtue?
  - (ii) How did Protagoras explain to Socrates why even the most highly virtuous person cannot always turn a non-virtuous person (such as a vicious or evil person) into a virtuous person?
4. How did Socrates convince Protagoras that nobody unjust can be temperate?

Ten Questions: The Protagoras Dialogue

5. How did Socrates convince Protagoras that wisdom and temperance are very similar virtues?
6. During the course of his discussion with Socrates, Protagoras came to believe that four of the five civic virtues were very similar to each other, because he came to believe that those four virtues were simply different kinds of knowledge.
  - (i) Which four of the five civic virtues did Protagoras believe were very similar to each other?
  - (ii) Which one of the five civic virtues did Protagoras believe was entirely different than the other four of the five civic virtues?
7. According to Socrates, courage requires both knowledge and confidence. Accordingly, answer the following two sub-questions by circling (or highlighting) the correct answer.
  - (i) According to Socrates, who is confident but ignorant? According to him, who has confidence but lacks knowledge? A coward or a maniac?
  - (ii) According to Socrates, who lacks both confidence and knowledge? A coward or a maniac?
8. According to Protagoras (and Socrates), everything pleasant (such as pleasure) is intrinsically good, and everything unpleasant (such as pain) is intrinsically bad. Yet also according to Protagoras (and Socrates), even pleasant things can be bad overall, and even unpleasant things can be good overall. Explain why Protagoras (and Socrates) thought so.
