

2. Eventually, the Coans and the Milesians agreed to give the golden tripod to a wise human, but the person to whom they offered the tripod declined to keep it, and so the tripod was given to another wise human, who also declined the offer. In the end, the tripod was offered to seven different wise humans, and each one of the seven men refused to keep the tripod. After the tripod had been offered to (and declined by) seven different wise men, it was dedicated to a god. Who was that god?

3. The tripod was offered to seven different wise men, and each one of the seven men refused to keep the tripod.

(i) Who were those seven wise men?

(a) _____

(b) _____

(c) _____

(d) _____

(e) _____

(f) _____

(g) _____

(ii) After the tripod had been offered to (and declined by) seven different wise men, it was dedicated to a god. Depending on the version of the golden tripod story, either one of three different sages was the sage who dedicated the tripod to the god. Who were those three sages?

(a) _____

(b) _____

(c) _____

4. The golden tripod was offered to seven different sages, and each one of the seven refused to keep the tripod. Yet even though the Ancient Greeks disagreed about which one of the seven sages was the first to be offered the tripod, the Ancient Greeks agreed that the first sage to be offered the tripod was either one of two sages. Who were those two sages?

(i) _____

(ii) _____