

Title: Finding money

Logline: This man loves finding dory and he set off to a mission which was that would people steal his wallet in public. So he went to his next family reunion then he set up the bait and next thing he knows he is in a room barley breathing.

Summary:

This guy has this thing for Finding Dory, you know, the movie. It gets him all excited about testing how people react in weird situations. Like, he starts hauling around stacks of cash everywhere he goes, acting all secretive about it. People keep asking where it came from, and that just makes him grin inside.

At the family reunion, things got interesting. His favorite cousin picks up on how smooth he is, the way he spins stories and lies without anyone batting an eye. It feels convincing, almost too good. The cousin starts looking at him funny, suspicious maybe, and pulls him aside for a quiet talk. Kidnapping him with a serum making him barely breath.

They end up in this closed room, away from everyone. The cousin pushes hard, wanting the real story on the money. Once he spills it, or at least some of it, the cousin drops this bomb. Turns out he is with the FBI, and they have been keeping tabs on his lying skills for a while now. Impressed, I guess, because he asks him to join up.

The two of them head out, boarding a plane to Dubai. They are supposed to track down this dangerous criminal who is hiding out there overseas. It seems like a big deal, but I am not totally sure how it all ties back to the experiments.

In the end, the Dubai criminal is finally caught during a late-night raid, trying to escape through the city streets and he finally gets his wallet back.
